

Children become numbed to violence when seen so often on TV. Children also learn to try things they never would have thought of by themselves. Increased violence and cruelty on the playground and bullying are a direct result of violence on TV and video games that the students see. Parents are not discussing what students see and evaluating and talking about violence and cruelty in general. Students make their own judgment calls or accept what they see as a measure of real life, they get a skewed picture of violence and fear, domination and power. This has significant effect on our society, religious and political attitudes and our idea of humanity.
